

Talking to Classmates

A girl steps in and says, "My name is Sheng, my English is fairly good out of the class. I can help you translate."

You politely reply, "Great, thank you!"

You are bombarded by questions from classmates: "Are you American or Chinese?" "Are Americans all loud?" "Do you regret not learning Chinese?" "Do you play football?"

What do you think of their questions to you?

Answer their questions

Kind of offending.. You don't want to keep socializing with them

Talking to Classmates

"I'm generally quiet and reserved. I don't play or watch football, and I'm not obese. I am American and I guess even though I do not know much Chinese, maybe I would consider Chinese as part of my cultural identity too."

Your classmates look awkwardly at each other and silently nod.
