

As you arrive early to your first day of Chinese class, you look around and see that it is a small class with no students from your school. How unexpected!

The teacher, Ms. Ying, starts class on the dot. "Today, we have a new exchange student from California, in the states, Jacob Chang! Please welcome him after class, everybody." The teacher explains in English and Chinese.

At the Exchange Program

As you arrive early to your first day of Chinese class, you look around and see that it is a small class with no students from your school. How unexpected!

The teacher, Ms. Ying, starts class on the dot. "Today, we have a new exchange student from California, in the states, Jacob Chang! Please welcome him after class, everybody." The teacher explains in English and Chinese.

Sit through class

After Class

Right as class ends, many students in your class gather around you excitedly. They all seem to be friendly with each other.

One girl says, “我叫妮妮，你有中文名字吗？你是美国人还是中国人？美国的人真的有肥胖症吗？你会踢橄榄球吗？”

You think to yourself, What did she just say and why is she speaking in Chinese? You caught an introduction, something about American vs. Chinese, something about being fat, and something about a sport?

Respond to the best of your ability

“I’m not fluent in Chinese”

Nod through the conversation